Graduated Compression Effect – Guide and Level

GRADUATED COMPRESSION delivers pressure that is strongest in the ankle and gradually less above to help blood circulation from lower sides to heart and prevent blood clots in vein valves. Compression stockings should be made with graduated compression effect to reach the effect as medical solutions for leg diseases.

With different pressure, compression levels could be defined as below:

Compression Classes

Compression Class	Compression Intensity	Compression in kPa	Compression in mmHg
I	Low	2.4 – 2.8	18-21
II	Moderate	3.1-4.3	23-32
III	High	4.5-6.1	34-46
IV	Very High	6.5 and higher	49 and higher

*1kPa = 7.5mmHg *1mmHg=0.133kPa

Residual Pressure Ratio

Compression Class	Residual pressure ration in % of pressure at the ankle
	at measuring point B	at measuring point C	at measuring point F or G
I	70-100	50-80	20-60
II	70-100	50-80	20-50
III	70-100	50-70	20-40
IV	70-100	50-70	20-40

Also, the levels could be applied for different purposes as following:

Ccl. I (low pressure, 18-21mmHg)

- Feeling of tired and heavy legs
- early venous insufficiency (weakness)
- mild varicose veins without pronounced edema
- varicose veins in pregnancy
- spider veins
- after sclerosis of varicose veins

Ccl. II (moderate pressure, 23-32mmHg)

- more serious symptoms
- more marked varicose veins or moderate edema
- after healing of minor ulcers
- after sclerosis and surgery for varicose veins
- after deep vein thrombosis (DVT)
- insufficiency (weakness) of the valves in the deep veins

Ccl. III (high pressure, 34-46mmHg)

- chronic venous insufficiency (weakness)
- pronounced edema
- atrophie blanche
- dermatosclerosis
- after resolution of severe ulcers

Ccl. IV (very high pressure, over 49mmHg)

- lymphoedema
- disfiguring swelling.

Compression Therapy and The Benefits

Venous disease is seldom cured but it is preventable and can be treated. Many factors cause venous maladies— heredity, age, excess weight, inactivity and hormonal change especially during pregnancy. Another major contributing factor is prolonged sitting or standing both of which cause dangerous pooling of blood in the lower legs. As with any illness, early detection and treatment of venous disease will greatly limit the seriousness of damage to your health. Symptoms of circulatory maladies include heaviness, fatigue and swelling in the feet and lower legs, and chronic pain, tingling and numbness in feet, ankles or the legs.

Graduated compression therapy is an effective treatment for venous disease. Graduated compression stockings compress the surface veins, keeping their diameter small and forcing blood into the deep vein system. Maximum graduated compression is applied to the lower extremities while compression decreases gradually up the leg. This accelerates the velocity at which the blood flows through the deep veins and increased blood flow to relieve the symptoms associated with venous insufficiency. With the use of Youleg® compression stockings, a patient will receive many benefits to help treat their venous conditions

As your partner of daily life, Youleg® compression stockings can reach following benefits:

- Recommended by physicians to treat venous malady
- Safe, non-invasive, effective and least expensive method of treatment
- Undisputed history of therapeutic benefits
- Scientifically designed to regulate blood flow velocity through the feet and legs
- Maximum pressure applied at the ankle systematically decreases up to upper sides which keeps proper venous blood flow in the legs
- Prevents back-flow and stagnation of blood in the lower legs that can cause clotting
